Teaching orphaned children and young adults in Vietnam to care for and raise pigs

A group home for orphaned children and young adults with cerebral palsy, autism, and a range of developmental challenges is struggling to meet the daily nutritional needs of its residents. While the local government provides a monthly stipend of $12.30 per resident, it is not enough to meet their basic dietary needs.

In an effort to ensure this entire population receives nutritious meals, PEARL S. BUCK INTERNATIONAL is seeking to increase the breeding livestock on a farmstead that has been established by the Thi Nghe Center. The additional livestock will supplement the food supply of the center's residents with fresh pork. These youth will also decrease their poverty levels through the sale of goods at local markets while also learning to live more independently.
